The extreme heat of the weather has given occasion to but little complaint, either as regards the condition of packages or the growing crop. There have been narrow areas of rain, but there is yet no the plants, or that a drought is being suffered, though that injuries have been sustained in some cases is scarcity a matter of doubt. As a general remark no fiesh causes of discoutent or apprehension have been discussed, and that complaints are based on anticodent disadvantages may be regarded as a suggestic death of the existing conditions have not ocen as the conditions have not ocen and unchanged; no sales reported; we duote at 10% and unchanged; no sales reported; we quote at 10% allo, for missare reported; we disposed to close old stocks at the improvement.

trade, which in many instances may be considered as extreme and unreliable; but we apprehend that the present outlook does not point to more than a scant three fourths of an average yield, and as the principal deficiency is in the districts which produce the heaviest tobaccos, the deficit in weight may probably be even greater. The Tennessee crop may not exceed a half-average. The Illinois and Indiana crops are from all accounts not unpromising. Considerable attention is being drawn to the Missouri crop, both on account of its growing prominence in our market and of the unusually extensive preparations in that State for increasing the tobacco cultivation. The carry promise of an Immense area has been modified by unfavorable weather, and we infer that the present situation does not justify anticipations of more than an average crop. The late advices from that State may be summed as follows by counties: Howard county, average; Randolph, Saline, and Charlton, fair; Callaway, in doubt, but probably average; Hay county, average, There are estimates, however, that the yield in Missouri wffi scarcely amount to an average, as it certainly would not but for the excessive breadth of land planted. As to the eastern crop, we infer that the situation is even less promising than in the West. A small area was planted in the more important districts, and great damage appears to have been inflicted by subsequent drought. Private advices from reliable parties report that in Southern and Southwestern Virginia and the border counties of North Carolina not more than half a crop can be expected, the prospects in some sections being worse than in 1874. As a consequence, the Virginia marand Southwestern Virginia and the border counties of North Carolina not more than half a crop can be expected, the prospects in some sections being worse than in 1874. As a consequence, the Virginia markets have sharply advanced, and mammfacturers are also marking up the prices of their goods.

Our market has been more influenced by shortcrop theories. An animated order of bidding has been maiotained throughout the week, and prices have advanced on all types and grades—lugs, 25@, 50c., and leaf, with the exception of cutting styles, 75c.@$1. Speculation has been mainly confined to common and fair leaf, which has been advanced by commetition with home and foreign buyers for legitimate use more than any other styles. Domestic manufacturers have not operated with noticeable freedom at the advance, though buying steadily as opportunities offered. Good fillers have been scarce, and black and bright wrappers chroulcally so, the former scarcely making an appearance during the week. There has been a liberal supply of Missourfs, the better sorts of which have been available to manufacturers as substitutes, though bought pretty freely also for the English market at full prices. Heavy North German styles, spinners, and Africans have been in moderate supply; but common to good regies have offered moderately well, meeting a liberal demand at gradually advancing prices. Cutting to-baccos have offered pretty freely or, some days, though smoking lugs have been scarce. Prices have undergone no quotable change, though sales of fancy packages have been made at $24 and $31.

The tobacco market opens with a weaker feeling. Buyers are not so anxious, but prices are well sustained on all grades. Holders are very firm in their views to-day, and we noticed considerable withdrawn on the bids made. The receipts are still good but will soon slack up, and sellers have confidence that they will be able to get full prices.
